This is a basic outline of the process and resources for researching the history of a North Carolina bill or statute. Much of the research involves traditional print materials located in the North Carolina Legislative Library, but certain information is available on the General Assembly website, the Legislative Library’s website or the Library’s Legislative History page.

The Library staff will assist patrons with their research, but services do not include compiling legislative histories. For directions, hours and other information, read About Us.

Before beginning your research, review How a Law is Made.

if you know the
YEAR or SESSION the bill was introduced.

1. To find the bill number, start with the NCGA Legislation page, which has tips and resources for finding bills. You can also find bill numbers using House or Senate journal indexes (digitized editions coming soon - March 2013) or session laws. When you have the bill number, go to step 7.

Start here
if you know the
STATUTE SECTION.

2. Look first in the current statutes. These are free online (read caveats carefully) or in print at many law and public libraries. The print version is the official version and contains editorial notes and other helpful material not in the unofficial web version. Current statutes are also available through paid online services.

3. If your section isn’t in the current statutes, check the out-of-date (superseded) statutes. Superseded statutes are available in the Legislative Library, the Supreme Court Library, the State Library, and law school libraries.

4. After finding the statute section, locate the history note following the end of the statute. This will lead you to the session law number. Example 1: “1983, c. 814, s. 1.” refers to section 1 of Chapter 814 of the 1983 Session Laws. Example 2: “S.L. 1997-210,” refers to Chapter 210 of the 1997 Session Laws. Abbreviations and a User’s Guide are located in the front of each volume of the General Statutes.

5. Locate the session laws listed in the history note. Check the Legislative Library’s statutory law page for links to digitized editions beginning in 1817. Printed volumes are available in the Legislative Library, the Supreme Court Library, the State Library, and law school libraries.

6. Read each session law to see if it affects the language you’re researching. Check each change listed in the statute’s history note until you find the change(s) you are researching. Once you have the bill number from the heading of the session law, go to Step 7.

Start here if you know the BILL NUMBER.

7. Using the bill number, compile the chronological bill history. Bill histories are online beginning in 1985 and on microfilm from 1969-1984. We have old computer printouts for bills from the 1973–1975 and 1979-1983 sessions. Use the Legislative Library Documents Locator to locate print and filmed bill histories. For earlier sessions, use the House and Senate Journals (digitized editions coming soon - March 2013) which index bills by page references. Write down each action on the bill and the date of the action, including all committees to which the bill was referred. For each bill, go through this process in both the House and Senate Journals. If the online or print source shows a companion bill, follow the same steps for the companion bill.

8. Review the bill in the bill books, the microfilm collection, or State Archives. It may be useful to look at all versions of the bill. For example, the draft version may have information not found in later editions of a bill, including a drafting code and other prefatory material indicating who drafted the bill, whether it originated in a study committee, whether a fiscal or actuarial note was filed, and whether it was recommended by an agency or other entity. Use the Legislative Library Documents Locator to find the location of bill books.

9. Identify the committees that considered the bill and review their minutes. Using the bill history from Step 7, review the minutes from the standing committee(s) which considered the bill. Use the Legislative Library Committee Minutes page to locate minutes. These are summary minutes only (not verbatim or transcribed), but you may find bill analyses and explanatory memoranda by legislative analysts here.

10. Determine whether the bill originated in a study or another interim committee. If a non-standing (study) committee recommended the bill, look for a study report or study committee minutes. The drafting code in the bill’s caption, the long title of the bill, session law indexes, or another reference source can indicate if a study was done. Identify online reports and older reports in the Legislative Library using the Legislative Library Study Reports page or Legislative Publications page. The Legislative Library also has a collection of study committee minutes in microfilm and print beginning in the late 1960s. Use the Legislative Library Committee Minutes page to locate these minutes. If the General Statutes Commission recommended the bill, check with a librarian for General Statutes Commission memoranda or other research resources available.

11. Floor debate may be available. Floor debate is recorded in the Senate and transferred to the State Archives following session. Senate recordings are available for 1977, 1979-2002 (tapes) and 2003 forward (CDs). Contact the Senate Principal Clerk’s Office for the current recording. The House chamber audio archive is online beginning with the 2009 session.

12. Summaries of legislation. The General Assembly’s Research Division publishes the post-session Summaries of Substantive Ratified Legislation. The UNC School of Government provides bill digests in its Daily Bulletin series (by subscription) and offers post-legislative summaries online and in print.
